

The current EU malting barley market turned bearish again this week due to French traders trying to sell into a market without many buyers. In the UK, prices are little changed due to most farmers and traders having already sold all they have to market from crop 2018. With the historically high prices we have had this season, this should not really come as a surprise to anyone. Crop 2019 is little changed, with none of the intended EU

